Federal disaster assistance is intended to supplement the efforts and available resources of States, local governments, and disaster relief organizations. Although the primary responsibility for disaster relief rests with State and local agencies, there are many Federal programs of disaster assistance available to supplement State and local efforts. This digest is designed to serve as an initial source of information for private citizens and public officials in need of a particular kind of disaster assistance. It includes both programs which require a Presidential declaration of a major disaster and those which do not. In addition, programs in preparedness which may serve to lessen the effects of a natural disaster are included.

The greatest single source of Federal disaster assistance is provided under the authorities of the Disaster Relief Act of 1974, Public Law 93-288, which is implemented by the Federal Disaster Assistance Administration (FDAA) following a Presidential declaration of a major disaster. FDAA administers grants to the States from the President's Disaster Relief Fund and directs and coordinates the disaster assistance functions of all Federal agencies, whether under Public Law 93-288 or their own authorities.

The President may also make a determination that an "emergency" exists, requiring assistance to supplement State and local efforts to save lives and protect property, public health and safety, or to avert or lessen the threat of a disaster. The purpose of such a determination is to make available emergency assistance which, because of the pressures of time or because of the unique capabilities of a Federal agency, can be more readily provided by the Federal government. It is specialized assistance to meet specific needs.

Certain Federal departments and agencies have programs under their own authorities which allow them to provide assistance even though damage from a natural disaster is not sufficient to justify a Presidential declaration. These programs are included in this digest.

Additional copies of this digest are available at FDAA's Washington headquarters or the FDAA Regional Office serving your State. Inquiries about specific programs should be directed to the agency listed as the "Information Source" for each program.

Definition of a Major Disaster

A "major disaster" means any hurricane, tornado, storm, flood, high water, wind-driven water, tidal wave, tsunami, earthquake, volcanic eruption, landslide, mudslide, snowstorm, drought, fire, explosion or other catastrophe in any part of the United States which, in the determination of the President, causes damage of sufficient severity and magnitude to warrant major disaster assistance by the Federal Government to supplement the efforts and resources of States, local governments, and relief organizations.

Definition of an Emergency

An "emergency" means any hurricane, tornado, storm, flood, high water, wind-driven water, tidal wave, tsunami, earthquake, volcanic eruption, landslide, mudslide, snowstorm, drought, fire, explosion, or other catastrophe in any part of the United States which requires Federal emergency assistance to supplement State and local efforts to save lives and protect property, public health and safety or to avert or lessen the threat of a disaster.

When Disaster Strikes

- Local authorities and individuals request help from...
- Private relief organizations and their State government, which give all assistance possible. If beyond their capability...
- the Governor requests a Presidential declaration of a major disaster or an emergency through...
- the FDAA Regional Office to...
- the FDAA Administrator who, on the basis of regional damage surveys and reports, evaluates the request and makes a recommendation to...
- the Secretary of HUD who recommends action to and by
- The President - who makes the final determination. If warranted, the President declares a "major disaster" or an "emergency", informs the Governor, and publicly announces the declaration. The Administrator of FDAA then designates the counties eligible for Federal disaster assistance, authorizes the obligation of funds, and directs and coordinates Federal relief efforts.

In a disaster which has resulted in considerable damage, but which is not of sufficient severity and magnitude to warrant a major disaster declaration or an emergency determination, State and local governments may request assistance from the Regional Director of FDAA in determining what Federal aid might be available. The FDAA Regional Directors monitor all disasters which occur in the States and Territories within their respective regions and, at the request of the State or local government, can advise which Federal agencies have disaster relief programs under their regular statutory authorities which could be of assistance.
